Single on Purpose

We've spent the last few weeks focusing on marriage, but I'd like to step back and think about our singles again this morning. Because of the church's focus on marriage, one of the main questions that arises for unmarried believers is, so what am I here for? This is especially true if a person has spent significant time as a single and is beginning to wonder if singleness is not just a season but a calling for their life. What's the purpose of being single and how can singleness be used for something meaningful?

As we've discussed previously, the church has not done the best job in helping singles find purpose and meaning in being single. Often, the advice to singles is marriage oriented—how to look for a mate, anticipating the future marriage, or being content in the moment while waiting. While these attitudes are helpful for some, for those who may spend a significant amount of their life—or all of it—single, this does nothing for them.

This morning, we'll look at some ideas from the life of Paul about how he found his purpose and calling while being single. We'll apply those principles to our own lives and seek to uncover a “singular purpose”—one that goes beyond marriage and looks at singleness not only as a gift, but as an intentional calling used for something great.

Dear Woodsfield Brethren,

We want to sincerely thank all those who helped us with our move. Thank you to all the men who came and helped us load up the trailer and U-Haul. We had you all driving all over the place and we appreciate you following Aaron and helping at the various locations. Thank you to Abby McFarland who came and helped Tiffany do some packing before the move as well. Thank you for making us feel at home every time we worshipped with you all. You became our family and we have missed seeing you all already. We will continue to remember you in our prayers as you continue the work of our Lord in Woodsfield. Thank you again and God bless you all.

In Christian Love,
Aaron, Tiffany, Eve, Jonah, Jacob and Daniel Seiler
